

The missed photo that wasn't

BY WILLIAM A. BABCOCK / Dozens of the United States' best sports photo journalists are not vying today – Friday – to take the Major League Baseball photo of the year. That photo would have shown Terry Francona, the manager of the Cleveland Indians, walking past the “green monster” wall in Boston's Fenway Park, wearing the most politically incorrect baseball cap on the planet. That would be the blue cap with a red bill, featuring a horribly stereotyped, toothy red-faced Native American nickname Chief Wahoo, sporting a large feather in his hair.